RESEARCH

Interests

My research examines corporate disclosure, stakeholder pressure, public activism, textual analysis, and capital markets. I am particularly interested in how managers adjust voluntary disclosure in response to external scrutiny and how these disclosure choices shape information environments for investors and other stakeholders.

Job Market Paper

“How Does Public Activism Shape Voluntary Disclosure? Evidence from the Thematic Contents of Conference Calls”, single-authored Year

Abstract: This paper examines how public activism shapes firms’ voluntary disclosure choices in conference calls. Using textual analysis of earnings call transcripts, I study whether local public activism changes the thematic content of managerial communication, with a focus on stakeholder salience, public scrutiny, and managers’ attention to non-financial issues. Replace this paragraph with the final abstract for the job market.
